Army to finally retire BDUs

Active and Reserve wear-out date set for April 30

by ELIZABETH M. LORGE
Army News Service

The Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for G-1 (Personnel) announced this month that the final wear-out date for the Army Battle Dress Uniform and Desert Battle Dress Uniform will be April 30 for both active-duty and reserve-component Soldiers.

The Army began phasing out the woodland and desert-patterned uniforms on June 14, 2004, with the debut of the digital-patterned Army Combat Uniform. "Our Army is always looking to constantly improve on everything we do, both on and off the battlefield," said Sgt. Maj. Katrina L. Easley, uniform policy sergeant major at G-1. "We took a look at the combat usability of what was once a good uniform, and based upon feedback from the field, decided to improve it and fix the many problems reported. There were at least 20 changes made and the result is the current ACU.

"Response has been fantastic. Soldiers have adapted well to the new uniform and they tell us they truly

Approximately 300 Soldiers and family members from the Dagger Brigade toured Grafenwoehr Jan. 12 to get familiar with the military community the brigade will soon call home.

The daylong excursion began at noon, when buses picked up

Schweinfurt Soldiers and families for the roughly two-hour drive to Grafenwoehr.

The first stop at "Graf" was the base's recently opened Army and Air Force Exchange Service shopping center. Eyes widened when the Schweinfurt visitors saw the post exchange, many for the first time.

"This is a beautiful PX," said

Yvonne Spiller as she, her husband Sgt. Artis R. Spiller, and the couple's two children browsed the aisles.

Sgt. Spiller, who is assigned to the 57th Signal Company, believes the exchange will serve his family's needs well.

Understanding mTBI key to dealing with condition

by KIMBERLY GEARHART
USAREUR Public Affairs

This is the second article in a series on mild traumatic brain injury.

After 15 long months, your spouse is finally home, safe and sound.

A few days later, you notice that your Soldier is irritable, sleepless, suffers from chronic headaches, trips over his own feet (loss of balance), and seems to be suffering from memory problems. This five-symptom cluster, as it's called, may indicate that your Soldier is suffering from mild traumatic brain injury, or mTBI.

Many Soldiers returning from war in Iraq and Afghanistan may exhibit signs of mTBI, which develops as the result of a concussive injury and disturbance of consciousness. Mortar attacks, vehicle accidents, and even falls can cause this sort of injury, according to Col. Mary Lopez, who heads up a team conducting screenings for mTBI.

Families are often the first to notice such changes in their Soldier, Lopez noted.

"The family is the most important element in any kind of rehab. We see the Soldier for an hour or two; you are with him every day. It is important for families to understand what the recovery process is and what they can

USAREUR sergeant chooses 'Soldier life' over law career

Sgt. David Williams says he joined the Army more than four and a half years ago because he owed a lot of money. Williams had racked up more than $100,000 in debt on student loans.

"After I graduated from the University of Notre Dame with a degree in political science, I went to the University of Southern California School of Law and earned a Juris Doctorate," said Williams, a production control manager for unmanned aerial vehicles in Company G, Task Force XII, the aviation task force led by U.S. Army Europe's 12th Combat Aviation Brigade.

"My friends from college went on to become lawyers, and I have cousins who followed in my footsteps to law school, who are lawyers," he said.

Williams said he passed the California bar exam, and while his family felt he should practice law, the Army offered something law firms in his area could not.

"I lived near a naval base, and I saw all of these signs that said the military would pay up to $65,000 of your college loans," he said. "So I talked to a recruiter, and he told me that the Army could pay that amount of money and could also send me to Europe."

The prospect of Europe played a vital role in his decision, he said.

"I spent my junior year of college in Toledo, Spain, and I just fell in love with Europe," said Williams. "It gave me a taste for foreign cultures and made me appreciate how much there is outside of the U.S."

The guarantee to help pay his student loans and the opportunity to return to Europe, he said, would not have been available if he had decided to join the Army as a commissioned officer.

"It's not a big deal to me, because I love my job,"

‘Big Dawg’ Soldiers certify for deployment to Iraq

16th SB Public Affairs

With only five-and-a-half months from ‘re-designation’ to their deployment ceremony, the logistics Soldiers of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 391st Combat Sustainment Support Battalion, 16th Sustainment Brigade, Bamberg, Germany, had a short ramp from notification to prepare for Iraq.

From Jan. 14 to Jan. 27, while many Army Soldiers were getting back into the groove of Army life after a two-week holiday vacation, “Big Dawg” Soldiers were training and certifying for deployment at the Joint Multinational Readiness Center, Hohenfels.

And more uniquely, the logistics Soldiers were certifying independently of a larger unit, a first for a logistics unit in Europe. Usually, logistics units certify as a subordinate unit within a combat brigade or division.

The independent certification was appropriate, because the headquarters company will be deploying to a location separate from many of the units of the 16th SB, and will work with different organizations and units in theater, said Maj. Eduardo Santiago, executive officer, 391st CSSB.

The training and certification process at JMRC demonstrates that the Army realizes logistics units are no longer tag-along groups but front-line warriors.

“In the contemporary operating environment that we all live in today, particularly when you’re deploying to places like Iraq and Afghanistan, there are no rear areas,” said Brig. Gen. Scott West, commander, 21st Theater Sustainment Command. “It’s a 360-degree fight. The threat is equal to everybody on that battlefield.”

The general spoke with Soldiers and leaders of the 391st CSSB during the unit’s convoy live fire Jan. 26, and even rode with the first team through their exercise.

“A Soldier who may be a truck driver, a mechanic, a cook, a signaler, a MP (military police) — it makes no difference — they have to be trained in warrior tasks and battle drills and the full range of their MOS (military occupational skill) to be successful on the battlefield,” West said.

The JMRC rotation was tailored specifically to logistics units, based on what they’re experiencing downrange, said Capt. James Geishaker, commander, HHC, 391st CSSB.

“It highlights that it’s not just infantry Soldiers that are being attacked,” Geishaker said. “It shows that the enemy is smart enough to attack the logistics chain that is supporting the effort in Iraq.”

The seasoned officer, whose last deployment was as an officer-in-charge of convoys from Kuwait to various sites in Iraq with the 37th Transportation Group, said logistics convoys are exposed to constant danger from small-arms fire, IED attacks, mortar and rocket-propelled grenades and even, occasionally, from friendly fire.

“The training done here will enable our Soldiers to experience the realities of engagements, different types of escalation of force, improve our battle drills, and will enable battalion staff to better support missions,” Geishaker said.

For the certification process, which all Army units have to undergo within 120 days of deploying, “Big Dog” Soldiers ran a forward operating base, conducted convoy logistics patrols, reacted to improvised explosive devices, set up landing zones, evacuated casualties and went through a cavalry-style convoy live fire.

Leaders were also tested.

In the battalion tactical operations center, leaders were challenged with managing 24-hour battlefield operations, including providing sustainment to forces in the battalion’s area of operations, conducting distribution operations, and working with Iraqi security forces, with constant scenarios coming at them from a higher command and subordinate units.

The scenarios, called “SIGACTs” (significant activities) in military parlance, included mortar attacks on the forward operating base, IED attacks on the main supply route, the possible capture of an American Soldier by Al Qaeda, inappropriate comments by a Soldier made to a reporter, injuries, deaths and even a disruption of the mail service.

“Our job is (to be) the reactive people,” said Sgt. 1st Class Eric Helmer, battle non-commissioned officer in charge, 391st CSSB. “Managing chaos would be the closest description. My job is what’s happening right this second.”

For many Soldiers in the company, most of who have deployed at least once, the operations tempo is difficult, but they were prepared for the deployment.

Capt. Gregory Jackson, chaplain (left), Pfc. Daniel Weber, analyst, Sgt. Michael Wyderka, battalion training non-commissioned officer in charge, and Staff Sgt. Eric Simmons, water purification non-commissioned officer, evacuate Spc. Kevin Ratliff, chemical biological radiological and nuclear non-commissioned officer in charge, all from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 391st Combat Sustainment Support Battalion, 16th Sustainment Brigade, during a convoy live fire exercise Jan. 26 at the Joint Multinational Readiness Center, Hohenfels.

Staff Sgt. Eric Simmons, water purification non-commissioned officer, has deployed twice already.

“I’m prepared mentally,” Simmons said. “With the deployments going back-to-back, I know it’s something I have to do. I raised my right hand to join, like everybody else.”

The married father of one said his family understood the deployments.

“They’re OK with it, they support it, but still, I get those questions from my daughter, ‘Daddy when are you going to be able to come back?’” Simmons said. “It’s kind of heartbreaking to hear that, but she knows Daddy’s going out there doing a bigger job.”

Simmons said he plans to make the Army a career.

For newer Soldiers in the company, the deployment was an opportunity to do their duty.

“I’m a Soldier,” said Pfc. Daniel Weber, analyst, 391st CSSB. “I’m doing my job to serve my country, my family and my friends. I’m doing what previous generations have done to make our country the greatest country in the world.”

The 20-year-old from Laurel, Md., said his fiancé, Stephanie Travitz, of Columbia, Md., was proud of him, and believed in the reconstruction of Iraq.

“I’d rather be in Iraq for 15-months than have the terrorists in the US,” Weber said.

Petraeus: Troop reduction plans on track

by JOHN J. KRUZEL
American Forces Press Service

Plans to withdraw four Army brigade combat teams and two Marine battalions by July are "on track" as the military seeks to draw down the number of troops in Iraq as quickly as ground conditions allow, the top U.S. commander in Iraq said Sunday.

Appearing today on CNN's "Late Edition with Wolf Blitzer," Army Gen. David H. Petraeus said the scheduled withdrawal will reduce the number of troops at the height of the surge by one quarter, or roughly 42,500.

Further reductions after July will be based on the state of Iraq's security, he added.

"The guidance that (Defense Secretary Robert Gates) in fact has given me — and the president and my chain of command, what all of them have said — is that reductions after July should be conditions-based," he said.

The general said after the upcoming drawdown, Defense Department and military officials will need time to "let things settle a bit" before making further reduction assessments. Their focus, he said, will be on removing forces expeditiously, but without undercutting progress made during the troop surge that launched this time last year.

Petraeus, commander of Multinational Force Iraq, said drawdowns aim to relieve strains on service members, many of whom have engaged in multiple and extended deployments to support U.S. operations in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Force level reductions also would save money and cut back the flow of resources, he said.

The Army strives to provide soldiers the highest possible amount of "dwell time" — the period at home stations between deployments — and reduce deployments from 15 months to 12, the general added.

"But we want to do it, again, in a way that will allow these gains to be maintained. We don't want to jeopardize what we have fought so hard for," he said. "The key is to make the timing of that right and to figure out when that will make sense."

Petraeus and U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Ryan C. Crocker are expected in coming months to give Congress a follow-up to the military and diplomatic progress update they delivered in September.

Asked today about Iraqi security forces' capability, Petraeus said the roughly 550,000-strong force is assuming an increasingly larger role in maintaining the country's security.

The overall forces — composed of some 343,000 police members, 208,000 defense ministry soldiers and 4,000 special operations forces — suffer nearly three times the number of U.S. military casualties, which Petraeus said indicated the Iraqis' devotion to stability in their country.

Earlier this month, more than 2 million religious pilgrims gathered in Iraq to celebrate the Islamic holiday Ashura. In a ceremony that has been marked in recent years by "terrible bloodshed," the Jan. 18 holiday occurred with minimal violence, the general said.

"The Iraqi security forces planned this year the security for that, ... and in fact, in Najaf, Karbala, and Baghdad the celebrations went off virtually without incident," he said, conceding that violence occurred in Basra and Nasiriya. "But Iraqi security forces responded in each of those cases and dealt with the situation."

Officials have stated that reductions of U.S. forces in Iraq depend largely on an Iraqi security force that is capable of tamping down violence in the country. Petraeus Sunday noted that half of Iraq's 18 provinces currently are under provincial control, but pointed out that Iraq's security institutions face challenges in breeding military leaders and in equipping and maintaining the current forces.

"(Leadership) is the area that is probably the most difficult, because you just can't find captains, colonels, and generals out there in the numbers that they need by just going back to those who are willing to serve from the old army — not all of whom, perhaps, have the qualities that one would want in the leadership of the new Iraq army anyway," Petraeus said.

The Multinational Force Iraq commander said he does not foresee the U.S. maintaining a permanent military presence in Iraq, but rather a smaller number of U.S. troops remaining in Iraq "for some period of years." Citing key pieces of legislation passed by the Iraqi parliament recently, Petraeus said in the future he envisions troops performing a mission that places greater emphasis on empowering Iraq's "reconcilables," those who embrace cooperation over divisiveness.

"I think our soldiers were prepared intellectually for the concept that there were reconcilables whom we needed to reach out to and try to become part of the solution over time, rather than part of the problem," he said. "And you try to minimize the number of irreconcilables, because at the end of the day, they have to be killed, captured, or run out of the country."

Garmisch Pond officers best in company

Pond Senior Security Officer Klaus Guetter and Security Officer Skultety were rated Pond Security's best marksmen during a November competition.

Two employees were selected from each installation where Pond Security has a presence to compete in the annual competition. This year was the first time Pond-Garmisch was represented.

Along with their competitors from throughout Germany, Guetter and Lubomir went through a real-time, computer-generated interactive course of physically demanding and mentally stressful law enforcement scenarios, and were tested on their shooting abilities.

High-tech shopping arrives at commissary

Bavarian News

After an intense cleaning and remodeling before the holidays, the local Defense Commissary Agency implemented a few new twists that may seem common to customers stateside and at the bigger kasernes but are new and unusual to the Alpine community.

The first and most obvious change for shoppers entering the store on January 8 was the two big IBM self-checkouts replacing one of the normal checkers.

The machines are intended to help speed the customers through the checkout process when the store is busy and they have only a few items, allowing them to do it themselves. A gaggle of customers clustered around the SCOs while a half dozen IBM and DECA employees helped the more adventurous ones get through their first use.

“This is for when you want to get in and get out,” explained Cheryl Wood of IBM between customers. “At first glance it seems confusing, but once you’ve used the system, it isn’t intimidating.”

Terry McClain, a teacher at the Garmisch American School, was coaxed from the sidelines to give the machine a try. With Wood’s help, he stepped up and the SCO walked him through his purchase. Items with a bar code were easy. He scanned the item, saw the price, and then the machine directed him to put the scanned item in the shopping bag.

He placed some produce on the scale and Wood showed him the short way to tell the SCO what was being weighed.

“Touch the item to purchase,” said the computer in a friendly, robotic female voice. McClain obliged, touching a picture of bananas on the screen.

“One-eighty. Move your bananas,” instructed the computer. McClain repeated the process with his next item and was told “move his green beans.” After a few tries he had the drill down.

“I think it took me longer right now, but I think probably it will be alright,” said McClain, feeding dollars into a bill slot. A handful of change rattled into the coin dish below.

“Please remember to take your change and your receipt. Thank you for shopping at the commissary,” said the computer politely.

Teacher Terry McClain is guided through his first experience with the new computerized checkout by Cheryl Wood. A staple in larger stores, the self-checkout is new to Garmisch, one of the first commissaries from Germany to Saudi Arabia receiving upgrades in 2008.

“It’s a trusting system, obviously,” said McClain, pocketing his change. “Take your bags and thank you for playing!”

The initial reaction to the machines has been good, said Wood.

“Most people like the machine and most will try it. Some of them aren’t going to try it. You know how people stand there—they’re looking over here, they’re looking away—and then their curiosity gets them to try it,” said Wood.

McClain admitted he was one of those unsure whether or not to try it before Wood encouraged him to take it for a test drive.

Unlike using the checkers and baggers, you can’t use your own shopping bag and you can’t choose paper or plastic bags, just plastic. Once you scan an item, the computer waits until it senses you’ve put it into a bag before continuing.

“We have the regular register if anybody would like a cashier to help them out,” said Teresa DeJesus, the new store director. “We also have price verification machines so the customers can scan their own products for prices.”

Another cashier will be added with a long belt for people who have a big shopping cart full of groceries, said DeJesus.

Another change in Garmisch regards the baggers.

“The new policy is for the baggers to carry the groceries out for the customers. I feel that it’s important here because we have quite a few retirees, older ladies and gentlemen, and we need to help them if it’s raining or snowing,” said DeJesus.

“In every other commissary, the baggers take the groceries out for the customer, and here they weren’t doing that. Now they will,” said DeJesus.

Products available stateside are not necessarily offered in Germany, and being a small garrison, Garmisch simply doesn’t have the space to carry the vast array of products found at a big commissary like Grafenwoehr, but if a product is in the regional system, the Garmisch commissary can get it. DECA has a product book with everything a region like Germany offers.

“If a customer saw an item at the Grafenwoehr or another big commissary and can’t find it in Garmisch, we will order that product from the Commissary Distribution Center,” said DeJesus. “If we have it, and we do not carry it in my store because this is a small store, no problem. If it is not in that book, then we cannot get it.”

Every month an amended list of products comes with some items deleted and new items added, and customers are welcomed to see it, said DeJesus.

Customers can look online to find what products are available for local purchase.

“It’s on the Web site www.commissaries.com” said DeJesus. “For example, if you’re in Garmisch and want to see if we carry the potato chips you like, you can look to see if we have it.”

As DeJesus phased in as the new director, Garmisch said good-bye to acting store administrator Joe Moore, who was honored by his colleagues and garrison manager Karin H. Santos a day after the new IBMs began service.

Moore oversaw the extensive cleaning and reorganization of the entire store just in time for the holidays.

Marshall Center meets security challenges, needs

Marshall Center Public Affairs

The NATO Assistant Secretary General for Defence Investment visited the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies Monday, during a trip to the NATO school in Oberammergau, Germany.

Peter Flory, who previously worked as assistant secretary of defense for international security policy from Aug. 2005 – Dec. 2006, met with Dr. John P. Rose, Marshall Center Director, staff and students of the center’s Program in Advanced Security Studies.

“In my view the Marshall Center is doing a lot of things to address the security challenges of today and in the future rather than being focused on the past, both in terms of the regional aspects of security as well as the increasingly important trans regional or globalized threats such as terrorism and weapons of mass destruction,” Flory said.

“The impression that I have is that the Marshall Center is very well sighted on current and future challenges,” he said.

As ASG/DI, Flory is responsible for the promotion of NATO armaments cooperation policies and programs, and for military common funding.

Flory said that one of the ways the Marshall Center contributes to the NATO mission is by training – both new and longstanding NATO members.

“Many of our newer NATO members have sent hundreds of people through the Marshall Center,” Flory said. “(for prospective NATO members) if they get the opportunity to join NATO, one of the reasons they will have been able to meet the standards for NATO admission will be in part attributable to the work of the Marshall Center in training members of their national security elites.

“The Marshall Center is a very important and valuable means in helping to develop the people who will be the NATO staff of today, tomorrow or the day after tomorrow – in particular, those coming from many of the new members,” Flory said.

The Marshall Center is a renowned German-American defense and security studies institute located in Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany.

Since its dedication in 1993, its mission has been to create a more stable security environment by advancing democratic institutions and relationships, especially in the field of defense; promoting active, peaceful security cooperation; and enhancing enduring partnerships among the nations of Europe, Eurasia and North America.

Supported by the U.S. Department of Defense and the German Ministry of Defense, the Marshall Center offers postgraduate-level resident programs as well as conferences, seminars and workshops to military and civilian officials from Europe, Eurasia, North America, and beyond.

The Marshall Center boasts an international faculty and staff with representatives from 10 partner nations.

Since 1993, more than 6,000 military and civilian leaders from more than 100 nations have graduated from resident courses and approximately 15,000 have attended more than 260 conferences on European and Central Asian security issues.

Service Credit Union giving back to military community

In a generous post-holiday gesture that surprised local leadership, the Garmisch branch of Service Credit Union issued 25 cash gift cards to local military personnel E-6 and below Jan. 16 at the George C. Marshall Center on Sheridan Kaserne.

Retired Army Brig. Gen. (Dr.) John P. Rose, director of the Marshall Center, hosted the brief presentation for the assembled warriors in his office along with Karin H. Santos, Manager, USAG-Garmisch.

“Here is a great example of where our community support services are paying back and recognizing the contributions that our men and women who are in uniform are making to our country, our services, and the sacrifices they’re making every day,” said Rose. “I’ll tell you what, I’ve been around for a while and it’s the first time I’ve heard of one of our corporate sponsors doing something like that.”

Santos couldn’t recall anything similar happening in her many years of service.

“I have to follow, I have not heard of any credit union doing this before,” said Santos, addressing the Soldiers and Airman present. “I think it’s a wonderful gesture, and you all are the lucky recipients of their generosity.”

The cards for Garmisch, representing a total of $2,000, were part of about $30,000 in gift cards issued in Europe by the SCU holiday gift card program, said Rose, adding that the money came from the credit union employees.

“We love our military, and we just want to give back, saying thank you for the sacrifices you make as well as the sacrifices your families make,” said SCU Garmisch branch manager Lori Johnson, herself a retired Air Force chief master sergeant. “A lot of us are former military. We know what you go through every day, and we just want to say thank you for everything that you do.”

As part of the ceremony, Johnson presented an oversized “gift card” to the topkick of the Marshall Center, First Sgt. Taher Almosadder.

“This program is a great thing to support the Soldier E-6 and below and their family. We appreciate what the credit union does,” said Almosadder, also accepting cards on behalf of personnel who couldn’t be present.

The cards came in increments of $50 and $100, with the larger amounts going to the junior enlisted with families first. Most of the card recipients on hand for the presentation were USAG-Garmisch military police.

“For January bills it’s a good thing to have a little extra cash. I’ve been in about 17 years serving but I’ve never heard of this,” said Capt. (P) VickyLynne Peters, garrison provost marshal.

“This is a beautiful duty station,” she said. “Sometimes it’s a little expensive, so this gives the younger soldiers an opportunity to go out, maybe take a ride up the ski lift, or to buy that memento that they wouldn’t have had from this area.”

1st Bn., 4th Infantry’s Team Dragon prepping for Afghanistan deployment

by Capt. JUNEL JEFFREY
JMRC Public Affairs Officer

As the Hohenfels community begins a new year, Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 4th Infantry Regiment, will once again rise to the challenge as yet another company deploys to Afghanistan in support of the International Security Assistance Force.

Company D, 1-4 Infantry Battalion will replace Company A, which is currently at the helm of the Zabul mission. Led by Capt. Wayne Keeler and Sergeant 1st Class Philip Eville, Team Dragon is no stranger to hard work.

“Nearly half of the men in Team Dragon are from other companies in 1-4 Infantry,” said Keeler. “Most of those men bring experience from previous deployments on this very mission.”

Unlike Alpha Company, which is an infantry unit, Team Dragon is a tank company that brings to the fight knowledge and experience about mounted operations.

Preparing for deployment is not an easy task. According to Capt. Warren Simmons, 1-4 Infantry Battalion assistant operations officer, the tank company took part in a challenging training regiment to ensure readiness.

“Team Dragon has been preparing for their deployment since June 2007,” Simmons said. “They qualified at the individual, team, squad, and platoon. Team Dragon is ready to go.”

“From fire team situational training to squad training exercises and live fire, we certified our squads,” Keeler said. “The training was challenging and the Dragons did exceptionally well.”

Company D last set out for Afghanistan in late 2006. Working in austere conditions and against defiant enemy forces, the light infantry company faces another long, tough road ahead in taking over this mission.

“Team Apache did extremely well in the execution of their mission,” said Maj. Sean Fisher, Task Force Zabul deputy commander. “The main expectation I have for Team Dragon is to take the progress made by the Soldiers, sailors, and airmen of Team Apache and improve upon it.”

Fisher said that Delta Company must be flexible and ready to execute both kinetic and non-kinetic operations in Afghanistan’s most severe terrain and weather conditions.

“They should expect nothing to come easy,” Fisher said. “I know with the great training and preparation they’ve had in Germany, they will be successful in developing upon the successful efforts of their fellow Warriors.”

As Delta Company sets its sights on continuing to provide the people of Zabul Province with a secure and prosperous environment, they will not go alone. They take with them the support and confidence of the Soldiers and families of the Hohenfels community.

“I am eager and anxious to see how my Soldiers will do when they face combat for the first time,” said Sgt. Bryan Fenn, a Delta Company mortarman. “I have no doubt in my mind we will be able to accomplish any task that lies ahead.”

“This is the reality of Army life,” Keeler said. “Our Soldiers and families embrace the situation with the spirit of family and community we have grown in Team Dragon.”

Delta Company is scheduled to deploy to Afghanistan in early 2008.

Soldiers, their families, and civilian employees in U.S. Army Garrison Hohenfels honored the lasting legacy of Martin Luther King Jr. at a luncheon in the Garrison Dining Facility Jan. 22.

Highlights of the event included a series of musical performances by Carla Nwoga and vignettes highlighting King’s life and vision presented by Master Sgt. Christopher Mulvihill, Sgt. 1st Class Paul Nwoga and Aundra Fryer.

Courtney Borg was the winner of an essay contest organized by Mulvihill, the Joint Multinational Readiness Center Equal Opportunity advisor.

In a presidential proclamation President George Bush wrote, “In the brief time Dr. King walked upon this earth, he devoted his life to strengthening the content of the American character and called on our Nation to live up to its founding principles of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness for all its citizens.

“Dr. King’s faith in the Almighty gave him the courage to confront discrimination and segregation, and he preached that all the powers of evil are ultimately no match for even one individual armed with eternal truths,” noted Bush.

“Through his determination, spirit, and resolve, Dr. King helped lift souls and lead one of the greatest movements for equality and freedom in history,” he said. “Our nation has made progress toward realizing Dr. King’s dream, yet the work to achieve liberty and justice for all is never-ending.”

Hohenfels military police working closely with German authorities

by GARRY BARROWS
Special to the Bavarian News

Team work is generally described as a cooperative effort by a group or team.

It also describes the relationship that exists between the Hohenfels Military Police and the local German law enforcement officials.

"We enjoy a very good, friendly working relationship with the local Polizei," said Provost Marshall Capt. Derek Wilson who is also the garrison's chief of the Emergency Services Directorate.

Most U.S. Army posts have good working relationships with local law enforcement agencies, but in Hohenfels the relationship seems to go beyond the typical.

"We have joint responsibilities and work together accordingly," Wilson said, "and not just outside the installation.

"The local Polizei will come here, and together we will do things like winter tire checks and even customs and security inspections of local national workers."

Wilson said that because of the long history of the training area, the local communities have become accustomed to Army personnel being here, and the local law enforcement inspectorate in Parsberg has developed a special trust with the post.

"If there is any kind of issue with a civilian, family member or contractor, and an investigation is necessary, it is their case, but we do the legwork," Wilson said. "We have a coordinated and respectful partnership."

Army families live in 16 off-base housing areas. In addition, hundreds of others live in private rentals in apartment complexes and houses.

"Every day, MPs have off-post responsibilities to check road conditions, respond to traffic situations, housing area patrols, and more," Wilson said.

Viktor Zacharda, director of the Parsberg detachment of the Polizei, has had the opportunity during his 18 years of service to understand the complexities of the kind of law enforcement that is needed in a mixed community where 16 percent of his jurisdiction is affiliated in some way with the United States government.

"I see our primary duty is to assist, to clarify, and to help anyone, regardless of nationality."

Zacharda said even though the 60-year-old Status of Forces Agreement is the formal basis for working together, common sense and good judgment are also important.

"There are really two problems we have to work through to have a good relationship," said Zacharda. "One is the constant change of the military police personnel. Two or three years and they're gone."

Fortunately, a long line of very good military police personnel have been stationed in Hohenfels who have sincerely tried to understand the German laws and how they work, he said.

As an example, Zacharda credits Wilson for making the effort to learn the German language and he now "speaks very good German," he said.

The second issue is the language barrier.

"Thank God we have the interpreters, otherwise we would drown," said Zacharda.

Long-term German speaking employees/interpreters are on call around the clock and have provided a continuity and consistency to everything that has evolved in making the working relationship so effective and satisfying.

It has also given him and his staff a confidence that, with the influence of the interpreters, a basic level of cooperation and understanding is always in place.

"They (the interpreters) have been here a long time and they know what the polizei and what the MPs need to begin with," Zacharda said.

Another example of a joint assignment is to have a combined group of MPs and polizei visit German night clubs frequented by U.S. Soldiers in the surrounding communities.

The German and American police also conduct random traffic stops on Friday and Saturday nights.

While cooperation between law enforcement agencies is important, the diligence of the citizens, both German and American, is even more important.

Zacharda said many Americans have told him, "Viktor, I feel so safe here."

"But that can be a double edged sword," Zacharda warns explaining that all citizens must stay alert and conscious of security in locking cars, garages and homes.

"You can not let your guard down," he advised.

Youth coaches making positive impact on kids, sought for local programs

Community Youth Sports coaches are preparing children for the future one season at a time.

Team sports available to the youth in Hohenfels build numerous, positive life skills that help young athletes succeed in the future.

Cooperation, planning ahead, dedication, and determination are all developed by children, and all while having fun and getting exercise.

In today's high calorie society, developing an enjoyable way to stay fit and eat healthy early on is always a good thing.

However, all of these benefits would not be possible without the positive impact of the community's volunteer coaches.

Simply holding a practice requires a great deal of time and energy from these coaches in planning and execution, but the benefits are reward enough for the effort.

Young athletes are providing a safe environment to interact with each other and learn new skills under the supervision of caring and knowledgeable coaches.

The coaches also serve as positive role models for their players. The commitment, selfless service, and positive attitude of volunteers coaches are absorbed and emulated by their young charges and are eventually fully adopted into the children's developing characters.

Youth sports volunteer coaches are without a doubt a necessary asset to any post.

Without the time, care, and effort of these men and women, the future, as well as the present, would not be quite as bright for our future leaders.

For information about becoming a Youth Sports Coach call DSN 466-2558.

Marines hit JMRC hard, 'FAST'

JMTC Public Affairs

More than 50 Marines from the 2nd Fleet Antiterrorism Security Team Company 5th Platoon from Rota Spain spent a week recently at the Joint Multinational Readiness Center in Hohenfels to hone their skills during sustainment training in advanced urban combat.

Vital security assets

FAST Company is a quick response team protecting vital security assets in the European theater.

"What we focus on is limited recapture in a secure environment," explained Capt. Rudy Salcido the 2F5 commander."

"If a naval installation or American Embassy is compromised," he said, "We have the ability to go in and take it back over."

The selection

According to Salcido each Marine is selected for FAST platoon on a 7-month rotation basis. Midway through the deployment team members are provided the opportunity to undergo this sustainment training.

Observer/Controllers from the Grizzlies at JMRC have gone to great lengths to provide their brothers-in-arms with a variety of critical and realistic training exercises.

"We have three different types of training lanes set up for the Marines," said Capt Dan Enslen the senior O/C for the rotation.

"We have a mounted combat lane, where they have to conduct a patrol on up-armored HMWVS," he said. "During this patrol they have to identify an IED cache that has been laid in by the enemy."

IED and ambush training

According to Enslen the lane also included reacting to contact with an improvised explosive device as well as an ambush.

Marines also conducted a dismounted patrol, during which they were tasked with clearing several buildings.

"During this lane they will be identifying materials that could be used for manufacturing IED," Enslen explained.

"We also have a torture victim at the electrical sub station they will have to deal with and an IED ambush," Enslen added.

According to Enslen the final lane will involve a limited recapture.

"They will have two police officers who have been taken to be tortured," he said. "They will have to go in and rescue these men with very little notice."

Day and night

The Marines finished their training at JMRC with a live-fire exercise at the shoot-house. Teams would enter the structure clearing rooms one at a time using live ammunition.

The platoon practiced their urban combat skills in both day and night time scenarios.

In addition to providing a very realistic training environment, JMRC provided observer/controllers, opposing forces and civilians on the battlefield to add to the experience.

A lasting impression

It was this attention to detail that made a lasting impression on some of the men.

"The nighttime scenarios were amazing," said Cpl. Rick Geslan, 2F5 fire team leader "We actually had to forge through buildings with furniture in them and we had aggressors who were not Marines, playing the aggressors."

A different experience

According to Geslan this training was a different experience for the unit.

"We had to deal with interpreters and civilians on the battlefield," he said.

Another aspect of this training was the use of Soldiers instead of other Marines as aggressors.

"Back home in York town Virginia we use other Marines as the aggressors," he said. "They have a tendency not to take their role as seriously."

The size and quality of the military operations on urban terrain sites at JMRC is what stuck in the minds of some of the visiting Marines.

The bare minimum

"Back home we have the bare minimum in our MOUT sites," said Lance Cpl. Michael Silver. "Here you have cities, buildings, people occupying it so it gives you the actual feeling that you are there."

"It wasn't just one thing that stuck in my head, it was everything," he said. "You had to really be on point with everything you do or it will come back to haunt you later."

Czech soldiers receive driver training from CATC

JMTC Public Affairs

Instructors from the Combined Arms Training Center in Vilseck were at the Joint Multinational Readiness Center in Hohenfels recently teaching Soldiers from the Czech Republic how to maintain and operate U.S. military armored HMMWV.

A total of 21 Czech Soldiers from the Czech Army Reconnaissance Battalion participated in the week-long course. The unit is preparing for their deployment to the Logar Province of Afghanistan in February.

"The importance of this training is familiarizing these Soldiers with vehicles they have never driven before," said Sgt. 1st Class Darryl Harris, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the sustainment training branch of CATC.

"Most of these students have never seen these vehicles before and they will be using them when they deploy to Afghanistan," said Harris.

According to Harris, instructors went to great lengths to insure this training was beneficial to our coalition counterparts.

"We didn't just throw this course together," Harris said. "We planned it for about a month."

"We have some experienced civilians who have backgrounds in transportation and maintenance," Harris said. "They came out and set up the course then put it through a dry run."

The course is divided into three separate stations. Station one tests the driver's ability to stop the vehicle. Each student accelerates the HMMWV to 20 miles-per-hour. Once this speed is achieved, the driver applies the brakes, learning how to compensate for the weight shift caused by the additional armor.

Station two is known as the serpentine track. Each driver winds the vehicle in and out of cones. This maneuver lets the driver to feel how the vehicle will respond traveling around barriers similar to what they may encounter in the field.

Parallel parking was the object of station three. Upon completion of the serpentine track the driver proceeds to a cordoned off area where they are required to park the vehicle.

"You can't really see around this vehicle," Harris said, "That's why it's important to learn how to use your mirrors and pay attention to your ground guide."

At the final station students also learn the appropriate hand signals to guide a driver into position.

"This training is very important to us," said Lt. Zdenek Soural, platoon commander of the Czech Army Reconnaissance battalion. "We are used to driving smaller vehicles with no armor. It is really different driving these larger U.S. vehicles with the armor."

"This has been really good training for my troops," Soural said. "It was a little difficult for us at first, but my men have really gained a lot of confidence."

Soural attributes this confidence to the hard work and dedication of the CATC instructors.

"The instructors have been of great," he said. "Their positive attitude towards us has been great during this training."

Soural said the hardest thing to get used to was driving a car with an automatic transmission.

"We have manual transmissions in our vehicles," he said. "Getting used to R and D on the stick has been interesting."

According to Soural, the facilities and equipment at JMRC is better than anything they have used in the past and they look forward to training there again.

Soldiers learn short-range marksmanship training tactics at JMTC

JMTC Public Affairs

Following closely with the idea that every Soldier is a rifleman, a mobile training team from the 192nd Brigade, 29th Infantry Charlie Company of Ft. Benning Georgia came to Grafenwohr recently to train Soldiers from different units in the art of short-range marksmanship.

During the week-long course noncommissioned officers were taught a variety of techniques to help better prepare their Soldiers to engage the enemy.

"The purpose of this course is to allow students to pick up different techniques," said Staff Sgt. Michael Borr, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the short range marksmanship course, "so when they go back to their unit they can train their Soldiers that they broaden their horizons."

Borr explained that the goal of the course was to teach students to be able to engage targets quickly and actively at close range.

"We want the Soldier to practice the techniques enough that when the time comes he just snaps into it instead of having to stop and think about what to do."

Staff Sgt. Michael Borr

techniques.

"We let them figure out which ones work best for them, and then we incorporate it all at the end into a transition scenario with different barricades," Borr said.

Techniques taught include shooting while in motion and around barricades. Students also learn the quickest and most effective way to change magazines during an engagement.

According to Borr the main focus of this course is to help the Soldier develop muscle memory in order to make their reactions to hostile fire reflexive in nature.

"We want the Soldier to practice the techniques enough that when the time comes he just snaps into it instead of having to stop and think about what to do," he said.

Borr explained that this course was to train NCOs to take techniques back to Soldiers in their units that don't ordinarily get to shoot.

"We like to focus on the Soldiers who weren't out doing patrols prior to the war like service support," Borr said.

"I feel this course is vital to those Soldiers who don't ordinarily get to shoot," he said. "These techniques will help better prepare them to complete their mission."

Units interested in this type of training are encouraged to contact the Training and Doctrine Command or visit the 192nd Brigade Web site at www.benning.mil.

Don't miss Italy's Carnevale

Story and photos by
Spc. CRYSTAL ABBOTT
SETAF Public Affairs Office

Whimsical costumes with elaborate masks create parades of color down the cobblestoned streets of Venice. People in their bright and fanciful costumes fill the streets during Carnevale. Similar to the Mardi Gras celebrations, most famous in New Orleans and Rio de Janeiro, Carnevale is a time of merriment, feasting and voluntary madness, and prior to the start of Lent.

The Carnevale masks and costumes originally broke down the social barriers between the upper and lower classes and allowed them to mingle freely. Today, traditional style masks are available to purchase in many of the shops around Venice. Costume rentals are also available in some of the shops and through some of the hotels. Today's Carnevale festival includes many elaborate balls, operas and parties that require the participants to be in costume. Many of these parties can be costly, with ticket prices ranging from 75 to 250 euros. For those who want to enjoy the festival on a smaller budget, there are parades and public performances held in and around St. Marks

Square, Piazza San Marco. It is also enjoyable to walk around viewing the varying flamboyance of the costumes and masks. For those who enjoy photography, Carnevale is the perfect venue to get many colorful photos. Some of the participants turn their costume into pieces of living art, as they pose and move in an artistic and fluid manner, flirting with the cameras that surround them. However, Carnevale certainly isn't for everyone. The popularity of the festival brings in multitudes of people from all over the world. You will find yourself stuck in large crowds with very little maneuvering room. All forms of transportation will have very long lines and likely standing room only. It is possible to walk from the train or bus station to the square, but even the walkways are crowded, so be sure to safeguard your personal items. You may also want to consider leaving small children at home as it is easy to get separated in the crowds and there is no room for strollers. This year's Carnevale festival runs from Jan. 25 – Feb 5. You can find more information about the events online at: <http://www.carnivalofvenice.com>. To arrive in Venice by train, be sure to take the train to the Venezia San Lucia station. From the bus or train station you can either walk or take a water taxi to St. Mark's Square.

(Far left) Some of the more elaborate costumes are renditions of Renaissance fashion and flamboyance. But it's not just period costume that is in fashion as can be seen by the futuristic Star Wars garb worn by revelers at last year's Carnevale.

By taking on 60-hour work weeks and moving more than 10 tons of mail a week, U. S. Army Garrison Ansbach community mail room workers helped deliver happy holidays to community members.

While many other people were on leave or working half days, the CMR crews at Storck Barracks, Katterbach Kaserne, Shipton Barracks and Barton Barracks were busy making sure Christmas presents were delivered on time.

Switching to 10-hour days for six days a week around Thanksgiving in preparation for their busiest time of the year, CMR employees from the top down realized the importance of delivering the goods for the holidays, said Fred Lane, USAG Ansbach postal officer.

"Because of the deployment, we wanted to make sure this holiday season was extra special," Lane said. "We worked hard to provide great customer service along with speedy service getting the mail out as early as possible each day."

Lane said the holiday season basically means doubling the normal workload for the CMRs. He said the CMRs processed about 21,500 pounds of mail a week, with a total of about 130,000 pounds over the six-week period that just ended in mid-January.

How do they feel now that the rush is over? "Exhausted," Lane said, adding that some well-earned time off was in store for the CMR crews, while continuing to provide the same great service they always provide.

"To be honest, whether it's a holiday or a regular day, whether you're a colonel or a private, everyone gets the same great service every day—it doesn't fluctuate," Lane said. "We're really conscious about our customer focus. If employees are happy, customers are happy and the mail is getting out, then that means everything is running smooth."

And it was smooth sailing, said Scott Hamilton, garrison director of human resources who oversees the postal operation. He said he'd received 20-25 positive comments through the garrison's Interactive Customer Evaluation system and more are coming in daily.

"That's huge for an organization," he said. "We got the occasional 'not satisfied' comment card, but getting 20-25 positive comments is outstanding. I'm proud of the work Fred and the CMRs are doing."

That success was also evidenced by some patrons making deliveries to the mail rooms.

"Several patrons took time to show their appreciation for our work by bringing us cookies, a cranberry cake, and one person even went to the commissary and bought sub sandwiches for everyone," Lane said. "It's nice. It makes it all worth it because you feel appreciated."

Bill Swanson, a worker at the Katterbach mail room who started the job as the Christmas rush was kicking off, agreed that the customer appreciation was welcome.

"No one was mad or sniping at us—they were understandably anxious to get their packages," he said. "I was surprised at how many people were appreciative of the job we were doing. Everyone here knows the job, wants to get it done and pulls together to get the job done."

Lane said it takes a lot of work by a lot of people to ensure a timely mail delivery.

"I want to thank the APO (American Post Office) down the hall for getting the mail scanned in so we could get it to our customers—and also for letting us help them break down the mail to get it out even quicker," he said. "And I know some people didn't get some mail on time, but we can only give them what we have in the facilities."

Lane added that people with difficulties getting a package or mail item should talk to him as he can oftentimes find out what happened or give them insight on what they can do about it.

The success of the 2007 holiday mail season, and the general success of everyday mail delivery within USAG Ansbach, was summed up by Kenneth Aungst, supervisor at the Illesheim CMR.

"We enjoy what we're doing—taking care of Soldiers and their families," Aungst said. "We have a good staff that is motivated, we have a good work climate, we do things in accordance with regulations and we have fun doing it."

AMS students compete in GEO-BEE

A seventh grader who hopes to follow in her father's footsteps as a pilot won top honors in Ansbach Middle School's GEO-BEE.

Victoria Bone proved tops in geography at the school after competing against 10 fellow students in the final round of the school-level National Geographic GEO-BEE competition Jan. 11.

As a reward for her victory, Bone got to take a test Jan. 18. The results of that test, which are not known at this time, will determine if she makes the final cut for the national-level competition in March in Washington, D.C., hosted by Jeopardy!'s own Alex Trebek, said Ansbach teacher and event organizer Jeff Dye.

"She must do exceptionally well on it" to make the cut, Dye said. "The National Geographic Society began this (competition) because there was a concern that people did not know their geography—where places are on the globe."

He cites popular NBC talk show host Jay Leno's "Jay-Walking" as an example.

"When Jay does his 'Jay-walking' segment and asks 'Where is Canada?' people do not know," he said. "So there was a real concern, and as a result, they decided that if there was some kind of competition where students were recognized for their knowledge—to learn these places and increase awareness of geography as a whole—it would encourage kids to pay closer attention."

The school submitted Bone's test to the judging committee in Washington and her results will be compared with other Department of Defense Dependent Schools-Europe and Pacific students' results. The student who scores the best on the written portion will be selected to compete in Washington.

"It is a competition of about 2,000-3,000 students," Dye said of the overall competition.

This is the second year in a row Bone has competed.

"I was nervous, even though I prepared and studied with my sister," she said.

"Being in the competition last year, where I studied for a month, helped prepare me. We studied capitals of continents, countries, major mountain ranges, lakes, and rivers—basically everything you can learn in geography."

"This year I only had to study about a week—a re-cap of last year's work," Bone added. "It is my favorite subject."

And her life goals give her added incentive to do well in geography.

"I like to travel and I hope to one day take after my dad and be a pilot," she said. "Having a geographical knowledge will really help me—I have to know this stuff. You never know what you'll run into."

Tyler Holderby finished in second place while Steven Taylor took third. The rest of the Top 10 were (in no particular order): Melody Reeder, T.J. Propp, Colton Cross, Gregory Mariscal, Dennis Allen, Jordan Callahan, and Andrew Ahearn.

Victoria Bone is congratulated by Ansbach Middle School teacher Jeff Dye after she won the school-level National Geographic GEO-BEE competition Jan. 11. Bone then took a test Jan. 18, which will determine if she is invited to take part in the national-level GEO-BEE in Washington, D.C., in March.

Garrison Spotlight

USAG Ansbach leadership recognizes employees for a job well done and excellent customer service in the Garrison Spotlight.

Maximus Brandel, Katterbach Commissary store work leader supervisor, was recently recognized for his outstanding customer service. A woman was shopping in the store with her four children when her 4-year-old became ill and collapsed on the floor, face down.

Brandel was nearby and came to their aid. "I noticed while I was busy stocking that she needed assistance and just did what came naturally to me," Brandel said. "I helped out and did what she told me to do with no questions asked. I am a people person—I enjoy helping others. It is rewarding."

He added that customer service is "the backbone of any operation—it is our lifeblood and livelihood, and keeps customers coming back."

"It interjects daily in my job here—from store opening to closing. I see these people every day and most of them know me by name. They come to me when they need something. I am always helping people with something—special orders, product inquiries, customer assistance, shoppers unfamiliar with the store, those types of things."

Brandel said that he is usually upbeat and has a positive attitude while working every day. "I like to have a good time at work, finish what I start and I lead by example—I would not ask anyone to do anything that I wouldn't do."

WHY I SERVE

Soldier joins Army to travel, becomes ‘go-to guy’

Sgt. BRANDON LITTLE

This is the first story in a new series entitled “Why I Serve.”

Staff Sgt. Derrick Mims, a native of Shreveport, La., has become the “go-to guy” whenever Company D, 3rd Battalion, 158th Aviation Regiment needs something done.

“I do a little bit of everything,” said Mims, the shop’s platoon maintenance supervisor for Company D.

In addition to being the maintenance supervisor, he is also the unit movement officer, the company equal opportunity liaison, the unit historian and the unit photographer.

He has been married to Tamara Mims for almost six years and they have a 5-year-old son, Derrian. Mims says he had no idea exactly where joining the Army would take him.

“I joined the military 13 years ago because I wanted to travel, see different things and just get away from Shreveport,” he said. “Most of my family thought going into the military wasn’t a good (idea) but, being a rebel, I decided I’m getting out of this place.”

He hoped to become a photographer in the Army because he had been taking photographs since he was in high school. When that job was unavailable, he chose to pursue for his second love: aviation.

“Growing up, my brother and I did a lot of research on aircraft,” he said. “My recruiter had a background in aviation maintenance, and once he explained his job to me, I knew that’s what I wanted to do.”

He was first stationed in Korea for five years and then he moved to Germany where he’s been ever since.

“I’ve known (Mims) since August of 1999,” said Company D 1st Sgt. Ronald Pickens, a native of Abilene, Texas. “When we first met, I was an aircraft component repair supervisor and later became his platoon sergeant.”

The two kept in touch over the years and, Pickens says, he even received a call from Mims before he went to Iraq in 2003 because he had some questions and needed a little mentorship on how to handle his first deployment.

Mims, now on his third deployment, is giving the same mentorship he received from Pickens to the younger and less experienced Soldiers of Company D.

“He’s been married for quite some time, and this is his third deployment,” Pickens said. “One thing the junior Soldiers who are married need is that faith and confidence that a marriage can work through these deployments. He gives them a little advice here and there on how to handle situations because everything seems to magnify while you’re apart.”

As for his dreams of becoming an Army photographer, Mims says he has accomplished just as much as any military photographer.

“I’ve had photos published in ‘Freedom Watch Magazine’, the ‘Anaconda Times’, ‘EURARMY Magazine’, ‘Army Aviation Magazine’ (Quad-A) and on various web pages (USAREUR, V Corp, U.S. Army, etc.),” he said. “I’ve also had non-military-related photos published in the ‘Girls of Lowrider Magazine’ and various webzines.

“I placed first and third in the 2005 Quad-A Photo Contest and received an honorable mention in a USAREUR-sponsored photo contest,” he said. “I also placed third in a photo contest on TakeGreatPictures.com in 2005.”

Ever since he’s known Mims, Pickens says, he’s been his “go-to guy” to get things done.

“Whether it’s handling unit equipment movement or temporarily filling in as platoon sergeant, he’d be the guy I would turn to,” he said. “I know he can perform any job asked of

Garrison opens gates to Kinderheim kids to share fortune, help spread holiday cheer

U. S. Army Garrison Ansbach community members helped spread holiday cheer outside the garrison’s gates by inviting 43 children from the Walburgisheim Von Feucht Kinderheim to Storck Barracks for tours, basketball, bowling, and shopping right before Christmas.

Children from the home, located 14 km south of Nuremburg in the town of Feucht, have been holiday guests of the Ansbach community for over 20 years, said Helga Moser, German-American liaison for the 12th Combat Aviation Brigade.

This year’s event was coordinated by the J. Ruth Roberts, Chapter 22, Order of the Eastern Star, District 8, Western Europe, Oklahoma Jurisdiction, Prince Hall Affiliated, along with other private organizations sponsoring the event.

The children were treated to bowling, static displays of military vehicles and aircraft, sporting events, games, and a favorite American pastime—shopping. And individual sponsors helped give the children a sense of belonging, Moser said.

She worked through unit family readiness support assistants to help J. Ruth Roberts find agency and individual sponsors.

“The purpose is to give disadvantaged children—those without families—a chance to interact with a family and feel part of one every year,” Moser said. “What the children experience today gives a lasting impression on them throughout the year.

“What is so special about this for them is that they get to interact with American families since the culture and activities are so different from the German ones they are used to—bowling is usually a big one,” she added. “It is a different way of celebrating Christmas with the children—it is louder and more celebratory as opposed to the ‘quieter’ season the Germans typically share.”

And there was a more personal touch added to this year’s event.

Capt. Stephen Short, USAG Ansbach provost marshal, receives a handmade gift from Varinia Bulut from the Walburgisheim Von Feucht Kinderheim, one of the 43 children from the home who shared in some holiday cheer at USAG Ansbach right before Christmas.

“This is the first year that the individual sponsors bought gifts for the children,” Moser said. “Usually, the gifts are purchased from fundraisers.”

Patrik Weichmann, a child visiting for the third time, got to ride around the community in the Military Police command vehicle, sponsored by Sgt. 1st Class James Hicks.

“I am having a lot of fun—riding around, playing basketball,” Weichmann said.

Other sponsors, Air Force Staff Sgt. Scott

Seeley, Det. 5, 7th Weather Squadron, and his wife, Jennifer, said sharing was their reason for sponsoring a child.

“We have been fortunate in our lives, we have children of our own, we are compassionate about children, and we want to share love with other children in need,” Seeley said. “It is a good way to spend our extra money on somebody else and for a good cause—less fortunate kids.”

Mrs. Seeley added that, “It is the holidays! Who doesn’t want to make a child smile?”

Ongoing improvements benefit community

January is a time of change and commitment. For the garrison and residents of Warner Barracks it is the perfect time to take notice of all the changes happening in our community. I'd like to take this opportunity to discuss a particular project/initiative that will take place soon - the closure of 15th Street.

For those of you who do not know, 15th Street is the street that runs along building 7047, the Community Activity Center, more commonly known as the CAC. It is the first road you can turn right on after entering gate 3.

If you regularly drive through this area, then you know, it's a high traffic area that can be confusing. The intersection raises a number of safety issues primarily arising from the number of near-miss vehicle accidents. While looking at the options for dealing with the 15th Street intersection we realized that closing the road would address two issues; safety and force protection. The street closure not only creates a safer environment for people entering the installation, it also improves our force protection measures at gate 3.

Additionally, the new traffic pattern will create designated parking spaces for anyone needing to sign in visitors, reducing the congestion at the intersection.

Please take some time to review the new gate 3 traffic pattern as illustrated in the diagram. I understand the change will take a little time to get used to and I appreciate your cooperation.

The new traffic pattern gives us approximately ten new parking spaces on Zollner Strasse, (inside gate 3) which will help facilitate signing in guests. More importantly, on 15th Street alongside the CAC, we will gain seven additional parking spaces, making the CAC more accessible to users. Whether you stop by to pick up a cup of coffee, drop off laundry or check out a book, this makes the valuable services provided by the CAC, the library and the Bamberg education center more convenient to you.

The closure of 15th Street will occur Feb 4. After the closure, when the weather is suitable, the marking of the designated parking spaces will occur. Rest assured, it will take no time for us to get used to this change.

Next up, I will provide an update on some prime time projects to include the opening of the newly renovated Child and Youth Fitness Facility and Community Bank, both reopening in early March. As always, this command is committed to our vision USAG Bamberg works every day, so Soldiers and Families can say: "Bamberg was the greatest community in which I have ever in. "Our Garrison: Making memories of a lifetime every day."

*Lt. Col. Gary A. Rosenberg
Commander, U.S. Army
Garrison Bamberg*

After the 15th Street closure, cars entering Warner Barracks through Gate 3 will no longer be able to make an immediate right turn.

Student recognized for commitment to service

Alysha Worrell leads a life of service, and her commitment to her community isn't going unnoticed.

Worrell has been selected as Bamberg's 2007 Youth of the Year after being nominated for the local Boys and Girls Club of America Youth of the Year competition.

Worrell, 17, was nominated for the local competition by Army Junior Reserves Officer Training Corps instructor, retired Army Maj. Madonna Roberts.

"Alysha stood out among her peers because of her caring attitude, maturity and commitment. I nominated her for her leadership, volunteer service, strength of character and academic record," said Roberts.

Worrell's strength is tested daily as she faces the physical challenges of living with muscular dystrophy. Diagnosed at age 2, Worrell says she draws her strength from her father, Parrish, a teacher at Bamberg Elementary School.

"He is my role model," Worrell confesses, "and the strongest person I know." Worrell's father also has MS and requires the use of a motorized wheelchair. "Watching him handle his disability has taught me a lot."

Despite her challenges, she keeps a lot going for a teenager besides her good grades. As a Cadet Major and battalion training officer with the 15th Battalion AJROTC, she is committed to volunteering for organizations such as the American Red Cross, the community library, Club Beyond and the High School. She volunteers over 100 hours per year and last May was awarded the "President's Volunteer Service Award."

"She is the first to volunteer and is always willing to help others," said Roberts. "Alysha lives by the words of Martin Luther King Jr.; 'Everybody can be great because anybody can serve... You only need a heart full of grace, a soul generated by love."

Worrell explains how being committed to serving others is not always easy. "It is difficult to keep things balanced at times," she said while taping a video interview to be sent to the Europe-wide competition level.

"I have to put school work first, and do all my other activities in my spare time," she said.

As Bamberg's local YOY winner Worrell now moves on to compete for the IMCOM-Europe title and the chance to be named the National Youth of the Year.

Local Soldiers help move mail

Bavarian News

The holidays have come and gone and so did all the mail, but not without a little help from three local Soldiers.

Spc. Christopher Correll, Pfc. Jose Guzman, and Pfc. Douglas Talbot took a break from regular duty to work as postal operations clerks at the Bamberg Army Post Office during the holiday mailing season Nov.1 through Jan.15.

Douglas Stewart, Bamberg post master said that year-round the Bamberg APO requires a staff of 10 to maintain operations, but during the holidays the number required is closer to 16. Borrowed military manpower helps supply the additional staffing the post office requires to move the mail during the two-and-a-half-month season.

"Making certain the mail gets to people is very gratifying work," said Stewart.

Before volunteering for the APO detail, Correll worked as a generator mechanic with the 240th Quarter Master Supply Co.

"It's definitely a job I am interested in doing in the future; a nice break from unit," he said.

After reporting for duty and two weeks of mandatory training, the new clerks could be seen bagging and tagging outbound mail for "Gateways" to CONUS, international, and downrange addresses and loading mail onto outbound trucks.

"It was stressful at times, like during the holiday rush, but everyone contributes and the work gets done," said Guzman, a night vision goggle repairer with 317th Maintenance Company.

"It's definitely something new," said Talbot, a small arms repairer with 317th Main.Co.

Guzman commented on what it was like to be part of the process, especially during the holidays.

"I love getting mail. Daily, after seeing all the full bags, you just know what you're doing is going to make someone smile," Guzman said.

Stewart said without the extra manpower, customers may have experienced long lines and wait times during the unpredictable season.

"We plan for the worst case scenarios," he said. "Ultimately the Soldiers' efforts freed up the finance clerks so they could provide service."

Upon completion of their detail, the three Soldiers received training certificates and were recognized for their outstanding service and dedication during the 2007-2008 holiday mailing season by Lt. Col. Richard Shepard, commander, 38th Personnel Services Battalion.

All three Soldiers agreed, "It's the best detail we've ever been on!"

'Daddy Cool' inspires Bamberg youth

"Listen to your parents and teachers, they are the ones who love you and want the best for you," said professional basketball player Derrick "Daddy Cool" Taylor. Taylor, a basketball veteran and member of the 2004 German basketball championship team GHP Bamberg, spent time speaking with and inspiring approximately 40 children at the Bamberg community library Jan. 22.

Taylor who now coaches a youth team in Bayreuth stressed education during his speech. "Education and hard work are the keys to success. If I was going back to the States today, all my basketball records wouldn't mean anything. What they would ask me there is if I had a degree."

"The children all had great questions," said Karen Lazerri, Bamberg library director who invited Taylor to speak after meeting him at a team building event. After the speech Taylor signed autographs and was available for photos.

Bamberg aid station makes a difference along border

Surrounded by snow covered mountains, the medical personnel of Task Force Saber work side-by-side to provide a first-class, life saving aid station on Forward Operating Base Naray located in northeastern Afghanistan along the Pakistan Border.

The FOB Naray Aid Station team is comprised of medical personnel from the 173rd Airborne Brigade Combat Team and the 160th Forward Surgical Team. Their first responsibility is to the U.S. Soldiers, whether it is routine shots, taking care of them when they're sick, caring for them when they are injured, or their top priority, treating Soldiers wounded in action.

"The Soldiers know that we are here for them, and that has given me a lot of good feelings about being out here. It's a huge privilege to be able to take care of U.S. Soldiers," said

Maj. Warren Cusick, 41, from Mesa, Ariz., a certified registered nurse-anesthetist and the officer-in-charge of the 160th FST.

"The main thing is for troops to have confidence and know when they go fight they're going to be cared for if anything bad happens to them. I used to be enlisted, and one thing that made me feel confident was knowing I would get medical care, and that is important," said Cusick.

Even though the aid station is only a series of tents, the Task Force Saber medical team delivers extraordinary medical care day and night as close to the fight as logistically possible.

"Our biggest challenge is ensuring that the U.S. personnel are taken care of when they get wounded in battle, and that is what we're always training for," said Capt. Scott M. Harrington, 31, from Daytona Beach, Fla., a family medicine doctor assigned to Charlie Company, 173rd Brigade Support Battalion.

"In a big battle, we could have 10 or 20 Soldiers come at one time, and that's happened before, we handled it appropriately, we got everybody out, and we saved their lives," he said.

"I am much more emotionally invested out here because you're among friends. It's very scary when we know the guys are in harm's way," Harrington said. "Every time somebody goes out, one of our medics from the aid station go with the line units. Whenever they go on convoys, one of our medics, who I work with daily, goes out with them."

The Naray Aid Station does much more than provide medical care for American Soldiers. They also are providing life changing and life saving medical treatment to many Afghans, Afghan National Security Forces, and when the need arises, the enemy.

"We have the best relationship with the aid station, they help us all the time," said Afghan National Army Capt. Amanullah, 36, a general-internal doctor assigned to the 3rd Kandak, 3rd Brigade, 201st Corps. "When our soldiers are sick, first we treat them. We try to cure them by ourselves. If we are unable to cure them, we take them to the aid station, and the good doctors help us. We have a very good relationship with the surgeons."

"I was worried and nervous about being treated by U.S. doctors, not knowing what to expect, but after arriving at the aid station and seeing how nice and kind everyone there was, I was okay," said Afghan Soldier Sherin Beg, 22, a medic assigned to 3rd Kandak, 3rd Brigade, 201st Corps. "Within an hour after arriving, I was asleep on the operating table having my appendix removed; the next thing I was awake and it was all over."

The majority of people in need of medical care at the aid station overwhelmingly have turned out to be Afghan. Mostly by word of mouth, the doctors and medics are gaining the trust of the local people, and are building a solid reputation for their compassionate, and respectful

Capt. Scott M. Harrington, 31, a family medicine doctor, from Daytona Beach, Fla., assigned to Charlie Company, 173rd Brigade Support Battalion, examines an Afghan baby girl, testing her reflexes with help from members of the 160th Forward Surgical Team Jan. 3, at FOB Naray Aid Station in northeastern Afghanistan. The infant's father said she has been weak since birth, and the doctors are concerned she may have cerebral palsy.

U.S. Army Spc. Melissa A. Hoffman, 23, from Avondale, Ariz., assigned to Charlie Company, 173rd Brigade Support Battalion prepares an Afghan mother to draw blood for testing Jan. 3 at FOB Naray Aid Station in northeastern Afghanistan. The aid station has seen more than 5,400 locals since Task Force Saber took over in May 2007.

Finance Soldiers train, certify for war at JMRC in Hohenfels

Story and photos by
Sgt. KEITH M. ANDERSON
16th SB Public Affairs

Finance Soldiers fought their way through small arms ambushes, treated and evacuated injured Soldiers, convoyed through hostile, crowded towns, and transported a VIP through a route full of improvised explosive devices and vehicle-borne IEDs during a situational training exercise at the Joint Multinational Readiness Center, Hohenfels, Jan. 18.

The Soldiers of Headquarters, 106th Financial Management Company, 16th Special Troops Battalion, 16th Sustainment Brigade, went through the intensive training to get certified for an upcoming deployment to Iraq.

"All Soldiers have to be warriors," said Capt. James LaCaria, logistics convoy officer in charge, Operations Group, JMRC. "This isn't the days of the Cold War, when combat service support Soldiers were back in the rear. With constant convoy logistic patrols and resupply missions, they're on the frontlines as often — if not more often — as combat units."

The finance Soldiers had to conduct the planning and execution of the convoy mission on a compressed schedule, but managed to sneak in at least four hours sleep before the daylong iterations of convoy logistics patrols.

"The STX lanes are intensive. We develop our scenarios based on what convoys are experiencing downrange," LaCaria said.

Spc. William Kowalski, supply clerk and armorer for 106th FM Co., was manning a machine gun during a STX mission when an IED exploded and took him by surprise.

"I was focused on the Iraqi Police vehicle broke down on the other side of the road," Kowalski said. "The IED exploded and smacked me on the back. It was pretty realistic with all the debris flying up."

The plaster-spray from the simulated IED that sprayed all over him and the up-armored High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled vehicle made the training more real, he said.

"I definitely felt glad that it was a fake," Kowalski said. "It was one of those wake-up calls."

Finance units do leave the Forward Operating Base and have to be proficient in warrior tasks, said 1st Sgt. Andrea Wright, first sergeant, 106th FM Co.

"Everybody's taking mortars," Wright said. "And finance Soldiers have finance support team missions outside the wire."

Wright explained that finance Soldiers have to go out and make contract payments to vendors, and have to go on "money runs," so that Soldiers can cash checks or get other financial services while in Iraq.

Sgt. 1st Class Frank Brown, internal control manager and convoy commander for the Jan. 18 convoy mission, said that the training was important.

"As finance Soldiers, we don't get to do this everyday," Brown said. "It was a great experience that has better prepared us for deployment."

The finance Soldiers also rehearsed warrior tasks and battle drills, conducted cashier training and participated in a convoy live fire, during the two-week certification exercise at JMRC, Hohenfels, and US Army Garrison Grafenwoehr.

Headquarters, 106th FM Co., will be joining two other finance units from the company in Iraq. Bravo Detachment, 106th FM Co., Ansbach, Germany, deployed last July to Ramadi and other nearby areas, and Alpha Detachment, 106th FM Co., Vilseck, Germany, deployed Oct. 22, to Rustimiya in southeastern Baghdad.

Army units must be certified within 120 days of deploying.

Town hall explains more details of Graf move

Representatives from U. S. Army Garrison Grafenwoehr held a town hall meeting at the Conn Club Jan. 14 aimed at familiarizing Dagger Soldiers and families with what will soon be their new home. Approximately 1,500 Soldiers and their families will be relocated to Grafenwoehr by mid-June.

Col. Brian Boyle, USAG Grafenwoehr commander, believes his command and community are ready for them.

“Every one of these big moves is a challenge ... but we have done this a couple of times,” he said, referring in particular to the recent move of the 2d Stryker Cavalry Regiment.

The decision to move the Dagger Brigade to Grafenwoehr, announced Jan. 10 by U.S. Army Europe, was primarily a tactical one, but Boyle’s main focus is on more day-to-day concerns.

Housing for Soldiers and families is a top concern, particularly when moving such a large group so quickly. Most family housing in Grafenwoehr is handled off-post in built-to-lease housing, with the largest single group being located in the exclusively built-to-lease community of Netzbarg. New schools and care centers are under construction there as well.

Many other small communities in the surrounding area support built-to-lease housing, “and frankly, they’re ecstatic” at the prospect of such a large influx of people, Boyle said.

Even so, that influx may put a strain on the elementary school in Grafenwoehr, which is currently operating at capacity with temporary buildings supplementing teaching space.

“We do not believe we will have a problem next year (because of new construction) ... but kids may have to be bussed” to the Vilseck school if they arrive before the end of the current school year, Boyle explained.

Another area of support about which families may be concerned is health care. Lt. Col. Telita Crosland, Grafenwoehr health clinic commander, was on hand at the town hall to allay concerns and explain what her clinic has to offer.

“I’m gonna sum it up: We’re going to give great health care,” Crosland said of her clinic’s mission.

The clinic is requesting additional staff in preparation for the growth spurt the garrison will soon experience. Using nursing staff to triage and handle patients with routine problems is one way Crosland intends to keep appointments available for more serious or complex issues.

“We’ve focused on what you need and on getting it in place before you get there,” she added, referring to the many new services being added, such as audiology and psychiatric care.

Audrey Bender, Grafenwoehr Moral, Welfare & Recreation director, briefed attendees on MWR and Army Community Service Center programs as well as Child & Youth Services available in her area.

“I have a very dynamic staff that does a lot of out-of-the-box thinking” which allows Bender to be able to offer unique programs like scuba diving.

Those moving with children will be able to electronically transfer their CYS registration when moving to Grafenwoehr, she added. Participants should notify Central Registration in Schweinfurt, so that records may be released.

Brigade representative Maj. John Nelson fielded questions from Schweinfurt community members faced with a move to Grafenwoehr. Questions focused on issues ranging from delaying moves to dislocation allowance eligibility to when and how orders will be issued.

“We’re trying to avoid taxing out the transportation system. It’s a little bit of a Rubik’s cube,” Nelson said.

For many questions, however, the answer had to be, “I’ll get back to you.”

Questions from the town hall were catalogued by brigade representatives and answers are forthcoming for those as yet unaddressed concerns.

Nelson noted that individual Soldier requests will be considered on a case-by-case basis taking into consideration not only the needs of the Army, but also the needs of the Soldier and his family.

‘A break in our ranks’ Couple remembered at ceremony

by MARK HEETER
Bavarian News

The 9th Engineer Battalion, Dagger Brigade and Schweinfurt community honored a Soldier and his wife at a memorial ceremony at the Ledward Chapel Jan. 17.

Sgt. Justin Spears, Company B, 9th EN Bn, and his wife, Vilma Crespo-Spears, were killed in an automobile accident on Autobahn 70 near Eltmann, Germany, Dec. 30, when a motorist traveling the wrong way collided with their vehicle. The couple’s 10-month-old daughter, Amira, was injured in the accident but has since been returned to the custody of family members.

“There is a break in our ranks,” said Chaplain (1st Lt.) Richard Nevard, 9th EN Bn chaplain.

“In a flash, this young family, making their way back to us, was taken from us,” said Lt. Col. Glen Masset, 9th EN Bn commander.

“Events like this are not supposed to occur. So why did it?” Masset pondered. “Maybe in this case, there is no right answer.”

The Spears family was at a place they wanted to be in their lives at the time leading up to the accident, Masset said.

Crespo-Spears had recently completed military service with the 38th Personnel Service Battalion and was the proud mother to Amira.

Justin had recently returned from deployment to Iraq, and the pair was together for only a few weeks before the accident.

“They were happy,” he said.

Spears’ company commander, Maj. John Fernas, recalled the first time he met Spears, during a training rotation in Grafenwoehr. “We were stuck in what seemed like mountains of snow,” he said, describing the harsh conditions facing him, Spears, and the rest of the Company B “Outlaws” in early 2006.

When he asked his platoon sergeants to name the Soldier who was most up to any task they gave him, one name came to mind – Spears.

“He was self-motivated, mature, focused and dependable,” Fernas said. Above all, though, he said, Spears was a family man.

“His topic of conversation was always his family,” which also included children, Thunder, 10, and Steel, 7, Fernas said.

Recalling his comrade, Staff Sgt. David Barrera remembered that Spears was a willing friend who was always there for anyone who needed him.

“He definitely made an impact on my life,” Barrera said, adding that Crespo-Spears was “a really amazing woman.”

“They will always be on my mind, in my prayers,” Barrera said.

Free tax filing service available at Conn Barracks tax center

by MARK HEETER
Bavarian News

The Schweinfurt tax center, located in Bldg. 30 on Conn Barracks, has opened for business. As of yesterday, paid tax preparers are available to make appointments and see walk-in customers.

“We have some of the best tax filers in Germany. We have a lot of experience in the office,” said Capt. Gregory Costello, legal assistance attorney with the Schweinfurt legal center.

The preparers are equipped to electronically file federal and state income taxes and can help customers receive refunds, in many cases, in 10 to 14 days – with one exception.

“This year, because of late changes to the tax code, people getting education credits and the credit for child and dependent care, their refund is going to be delayed,” said Robin Allen, one of the center’s tax preparers.

People expecting to file for those credits can come in to have their forms prepared; however, the filers will not be able to submit the returns via computer until around mid-February, according to Allen.

“It’s because forms aren’t available,” she said.

Among the important reminders, according to Costello, is that spouses whose Soldier-sponsor is deployed can file the return with a power of attorney, Costello said.

“You can get a special power of attorney done here (at the legal center in Bldg. 1, Conn Barracks) for this,” Costello said.

Those who plan to file electronically need:

- Military ID card
- Social security or Individual Tax Identification Number card for all individuals on the return
- All W-2 and 1099 forms
- Copies of last year’s returns, if available
- Bank routing and account numbers – not from a debit or credit card
- Joint filers must bring either the spouse or power of attorney for tax filing
- Any other relevant tax information

The tax center hours of operation are Mon-Fri, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and the third Saturday of each month, according to Costello. To schedule an appointment, call DSN 353-8992 or CIV 09721-96-8992.

Miska wins SES spelling bee for second year

Bavarian News

Schweinfurt Elementary School reconvened their annual spelling bee Jan. 17 for third-through fifth-graders.

Twenty-eight children gathered in the multipurpose room with number tags around their necks and ready to spell.

"They've all taken it in stride," said Sharon Rakestraw, SES reading support teacher, regarding the student reactions to having to repeat the spelling bee due to complications with the initial competition held two days earlier.

Each student was provided the opportunity to study the pre-approved words ahead of time.

"This year everything was online," Rakestraw said. Teachers, students, and parents were given instructions on how to download "Spell It!" in order to view the possible words to be used in the competition. "Spell It!" focuses on approximately 700 words which are divided into sections by language of origin.

Teresa Duncan, Susan Wesley, and Carol Haager sat at the judges' table for the duration of the competition while Rakestraw pronounced each word to the participating students.

By round three, only 10 of the 28 students remained, and within 45 minutes of the first word being read, fourth-grader Heather Miska correctly spelled "genuine" and was declared the winner for the second year in a row.

Fourth-grader Justin Bulanadi came in second place to serve as the alternate for the next-level competition to be held in Ramstein in the near future.

"I wasn't here last year, but it's just nice to be here this year," said Miska's father, Lt. Col. Steven Miska, who was downrange for last year's spelling bee.

For winning the SES competition, Miska received a $25 AAFES gift card as well as a collegiate dictionary to continue her studies.

"Spelling is a lot of hard work," said SES Principal Wilma Holt. "Some of us have it naturally, and some of us have to work at it."

Bamberg clinic fills host nation prescriptions

USAG Bamberg Public Affairs news release

Active duty Soldiers and family members seen by host nation providers do not have to pay up-front for their prescriptions. Patients seen by German providers can have their prescriptions filled at the Bamberg Health Clinic provided the written prescription meets certain criteria.

In the past, prescriptions coming from host nation providers were not filled because of patient safety concerns.

“Most unfilled prescriptions we received were not written according to the U.S.-based pharmacy protocol,” said Maj. Pablito Gahol, U. S. Army Garrison Bamberg Health Clinic commander, and “with over 150 prescriptions being filled per day by our pharmacy personnel, there is no room for errors.”

To ensure that your prescription gets filled, and avoid paying up-front, patients should review the pharmacy requirements for host nation written prescriptions.

The Bamberg Health Clinic pharmacy can only fill prescriptions from TRICARE authorized providers contained in the Health Clinic’s pharmacy database. The prescription must be for U.S. Federal Drug Administration approved drugs listed on the Europe Regional Medical Command formulary. Medication names and dosage instructions must be written in clear English. Prescriptions for controlled substances cannot be filled at military pharmacies. Herbal supplements and nutraceuticals normally prescribed by German providers are usually not available.

While the military pharmacy does provide cost savings and convenience to beneficiaries, not all host nation prescriptions can be filled here Gahol explains. Patients should note that German providers do not have to participate in this program. German providers can prescribe German medications and if this occurs the prescription will need to be filled at a German pharmacy (Apotheke). In this instance, patients will need to pay for the prescription and file a claim for reimbursement through TRICARE.

To assist patients, “We have asked our host nation providers to look at our formulary before issuing prescriptions. If the medication is in our formulary, then we can easily fill this request,” Gahol said.

For more information about reimbursement contact Michaela E. Blanton, TRICARE BCAC/ Network Coordinator (Referrals/Billing/ Benefits) at DSN 469-7897.

The Bamberg Health Clinic Pharmacy is open from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Closed on federal holidays, weekends, and on some training days (two afternoons a month). Health Clinic closures are announced in advanced in the Warner Weekly and the Bavarian News.

Immunizations prevent measles

by ANNE M. TORPHY
BMEDDAC Public Affairs Officer

The German State of Bavaria has reported ninety-five cases of measles during the recent fall and winter months. Measles is a rare disease in the United States due to the efforts of health officials in promoting immunizations. A telling factor in the recent spike is that, except in one case, the disease occurred in patients who had not been immunized for measles.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, measles is an infectious disease caused by a virus. Initial symptoms include a runny nose, cough, fever, and fatigue. After about three days, a red blotchy rash appears on the face and spreads to the rest of the body, and then lasts about three more days.

Measles is highly contagious and outbreaks are most common in the late winter in early spring.

“It is possible to come into contact with people who don’t know they have measles, as most have been exposed to the virus about ten to twelve days before exhibiting any symptoms,” warned Dr. Sarah Niles, Chief, Preventative Medicine, MEDDAC Bavaria.

Measles is spread by coming into contact with the saliva of an infected person through coughing, kissing, or sharing utensils or a toothbrush.

All children and any adult who did not have measles as a child or who did not receive measles vaccine are at risk. Most children will become very sick with the disease but recover quickly, with no ill effects.

“There is a slight possibility that serious complications, such as pneumonia or inflammation of the brain, can result from infection of the measles virus,” said Niles.

Immunization is key. “The best way of preventing the disease is through immunization with the measles vaccine,” Niles said. “This vaccine is administered as part of the combined measles-mumps-rubella vaccine and is typically given to all infants when they are 12 to 15 months and then again at 4 to 6 years or 11 to 12 years of age.”

All unimmunized children and adults are at risk for the disease and should receive the measles vaccine.

“Adults who have not had measles and who have not been vaccinated are at-risk for the disease. Having the disease or receiving the vaccine provides lifetime immunity from measles,” Niles emphasized.

Contact your MEDDAC Bavaria Health Clinic for more information on the measles vaccination. Health clinics are located in Bamberg, Grafenwoehr, Hohenfels, Illesheim, Katterback, Schweinfurt, Vilseck, and Wuerzburg. Clinic information is online at <http://www.wuerzburg.healthcare.hqusa.eur.army.mil/>. For more information on measles and its prevention through vaccination, visit the CDC Web site at <http://www.cdc.gov/vaccines/vpd-vac/measles/default.htm>.

Retirees urged to get vaccines

Europe Regional Medical Command news release

Zostavax, the vaccine designed to prevent shingles for persons age 60 and older is available at Army health clinics, and health officials urge eligible retirees to get the vaccine as soon as possible.

Following a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommendation on Oct.19, 2007, military health officials decided to make the vaccine available to Tricare beneficiaries. The vaccine is free of charge when given in a military health clinic to authorized beneficiaries and civilians authorized space available care.

Shingles is a painful viral disease that affects more than one million Americans every year. More than half of those cases happen in people age 60 or older. The CDC recommends a single dose of shingles vaccine for everyone age 60 and older.

“Shingles comes from a dormant virus living in our bodies. It has become more common as our children are no longer getting the chickenpox. When we reach our sixties and older, the immune system does not remember our past infection, and our bodies become more susceptible to this often painful and debilitating disease. The good news is that the disease is a short-term illness, but prevention through vaccination is the key,” said Dr. Sarah Niles, Chief Preventive Medicine USAMEDDAC Bavaria.

In a shingles prevention study done by the Veterans Administration Cooperative Trial, run by Dr. Michael Oxman out of the University of California, San Diego, Zostavax was more than 50 percent effective in reducing the incidence of shingles and more than 60 percent effective in reducing some of its associated symptoms. Even in people who suffer from the disease, most of those who were vaccinated experienced less pain.

Shingles is caused by the varicella-zoster virus, the same virus that causes chickenpox in children. It remains in the body for decades, sleeping in nerve cells along the spinal column. A shingles rash usually appears on one side of the face or body and lasts between two to four weeks. It is painful and can be accompanied by fever, chills, and upset stomach.

The medical community is also encouraging adults age 65 and older to get the pneumonia vaccine. They stress these facts:

■ Pneumococcal disease can kill. It is the sixth leading cause of death in the U.S.

■ It can be a miserable and expensive illness. There are 100,000 – 130,000 hospitalizations annually in the U.S. It can affect lungs, blood, and brain. It usually causes fever, cough, and shortness of breath.

■ Pneumococcal disease can affect people of all ages, but adults ages 65 and over are at higher risk for complications from both the flu and pneumococcal disease. The shot can help protect from serious infection in your lungs, blood, and brain.

HEALTHY EMPOWERMENT

BY DEMETRIUS WILLIS

Dear Demetrius,
I have always struggled with motivation to exercise. I tend to begin working out for a couple of weeks and then stop after the soreness, pain, and inconvenience of exercise becomes too much. I was considering a personal trainer. How do I know what to look for in a personal trainer? Do you recommend everyone use a personal trainer?

“Results with Convenience”

Natalia

Dear Natalia,
No, personal trainers are not needed by everyone. Only you will know if you “need” a personal trainer or not but what I can tell you is what a personal trainer should do:

A personal trainer provides education on muscles and related body systems. Through this understanding, you begin to empower yourself so you will not become dependent upon the personal trainer to have a “good workout.”

A personal trainer provides motivation. Even I need a “kick in the pants” to get to the gym or to do that extra repetition on occasion.

The personal trainer is accountable, understands, and responds to your needs. She or he should be a professional.

Personal training is a job and it should be treated as such. A personal trainer should not ignore or dismiss questions or problems you have. They should not only want you to workout on the days you are with them.

Finally, they do not interrupt your session to converse with friends or talk on the phone. You are their main focus and their only focus during your one hour session.

Choose a trainer like you choose a doctor. Look at the trainer’s credentials, get a feel or vibe from them, and listen to what you have heard from clients about the trainer.

Do the research and watch trainers in action. Good Luck.

1st AD Soldiers try out Army’s improved outer tactical vest

Maj. WAYNE MAROTTO
Army News Service

For as long as the Army has used Interceptor Body Armor, Soldiers have complained that it is too heavy, too hot, and too cumbersome. But those complaints may be a thing of the past for Soldiers in U.S. Army Europe’s 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 1st Armored Division. Those Soldiers recently donned the Army’s newest body armor — the Improved Outer Tactical Vest.

“The IOTV is a lot more comfortable because of the mesh lining inside,” said Sgt. Brian Freeman, a tanker with 2nd BCT’s 1st Battalion, 35th Armor. “The waist strap also makes it fit better by redistributing the weight off my shoulders and moving it around my waist.”

Freeman ought to know. He deployed with the 2nd BCT for the first iteration of Operation Iraqi Freedom carrying woodland camouflage pattern IBA.

“We didn’t even get small arms protection insert plates until the fifth month in country,” said Freeman. “I like the mesh lining; it makes it more comfortable.”

The mesh is intended to keep the wearer’s body cooler by improving ventilation.

The IOTV is the Army’s latest evolution of body armor designed to protect the Soldier’s torso area.

According to information released by the Army’s Program Executive Office Soldier, the agency in charge of developing and fielding new equipment, the IOTV meets PEO Soldier’s goals of providing troops the most advanced protective gear available, while also improving comfort and mission effectiveness.

The Army spent a good deal of time asking

Soldiers for suggestions and feedback about existing body armor, and then tested new designs based on their responses.

As a result, the IOTV has several advantages over its predecessor. It is three pounds lighter; it provides more coverage in the small of the back; it sits higher around the armpit area; and it sits lower on the torso, said Tony Perez, Team 5 fielding leader for Engineering Solution Products, the contractor selected by the Army to field the IOTV to the 2nd BCT.

Perez noted that the new design addresses one of the biggest complaints about earlier body armor models — that the addition of side SAPI plates forced the Soldier’s arms awkwardly away from his body.

“The side plates on the IOTV are in a better position, decreasing the profile and allowing better arm movement,” Perez said.

“The IOTV are in a better position, decreasing the profile and allowing better arm movement.”

Brigade Soldiers who tried on the IOTV called it a welcome improvement.

“The IBA had zero cushioning inside, especially on the shoulders,” Freeman said. “The IOTV fits better and it has a quick release, which makes it better than the IBA.”

The quick-release cable feature allows Soldiers to get out of the IOTV with one pull by disassembling the vest into two parts that fall to the ground. That innovation should help a Soldier get out of the IOTV quickly when needed — such as when a military vehicle rolls over into water — allowing him to escape the submerging vehicle or be pulled more easily to safety. The quick release should also help medics to treat injured or wounded Soldiers quickly.

Pfc. Tony Gonzales, a tank driver for 1-35th Armor, said the IOTV “is a lot better, because it fits better around the body and is more comfortable.”

Sgt. Brian Freeman pulls the quick-release cable on Sgt. William Huff’s Improved Outer Tactical Vest during a training session for Soldiers of U.S. Army Europe’s 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 1st Armored Division in Baumholder, Germany, Jan. 23. The quick-release, one of several improved features of the new armor, is designed to allow the wearer to quickly remove the IOTV when needed.

Pfc. William Fraleigh, an infantryman from the 2nd BCT’s A Company, 1st Battalion, 6th Infantry, conceded that the IOTV allows for better flexibility and movement, and even admitted that the quick-release could prove invaluable if needed during an emergency. But giving up his IBA will be like throwing away a comfortable pair of old shoes, and he was a bit superstitious about the idea.

“It always worked for me in combat and I felt comfortable in it,” said Fraleigh.

“I liked the IBA better, because it is easier to put on than the IOTV. I don’t like the emergency quick-release, because it might get snagged on something during a patrol and the body armor comes undone. You don’t have time to put it back together while patrolling.”

The 2nd BCT continues its preparation for its scheduled spring deployment to Iraq.

footage than any other AAFES exchange in Europe, according to PX manager Stephanie Burns. The shopping center also offers several restaurants and concession shops in the mall-like setting.

The Schweinfurt visitors also visited the new commissary located in the shopping center complex. The store is more than triple the size of the previous facility, and offers more brands — a total of 11,230 items — for shoppers to choose, according to garrison officials.

From the shopping center, tour participants received a community briefing, presented by U.S. Army Garrison Grafenwoehr Commander Col. Brian T. Boyle.

“Our mission is to get you acquainted with our community,” Boyle told the visitors. “We are sure you will find it satisfactory, and that you will enjoy being here.”

Following the briefing, tour participants learned that shopping services aren’t the only new features in town. Next up came what the majority of the Schweinfurt group seemed most interested in seeing—

Grafenwoehr’s on- and off-post housing areas.

“I’m really concerned about the living conditions,” said Staff Sgt. Brett E. McHaney of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry. “We are leaving the home we’re (settled) in,” he added, as his wife, Rachel, nodded in agreement.

The tour made a sweep through the post’s recently renovated on-post housing area and past the community’s elementary and middle schools — the high school is located in the nearby Army community at Vilseck — before taking a walk-through of homes in the new off-post Netzbaurg Housing Area.

Danny Brannon, an engineer with the Installation Management Agency-Europe, said Netzbaurg contains more than 550 new houses. There are 11 home designs varying in size from 1,300 to 1,900 square feet.

“This housing is better than what I was offered when I initially took my commission,” said V Corps Commander Lt. Gen. Kenneth W. Hunzeker, who joined the group for the in-depth look at Grafenwoehr. “It’s amazing.”

do to help,” she said.

The local medical command, under Col. Theresa Schneider, has been “working at increasing awareness among providers and the entire MEDDAC team,” but family awareness is key to identifying problems.

Often, Soldiers may be reluctant to seek treatment, Schneider noted, and it may fall to the spouse to make sure the Soldier is helped.

“There are a lot of avenues available. One thing the spouse can do is come on over to the clinic. Lt. Col. (Daniel) Duecker and his team are very available to talk,” she said. The Schweinfurt Health Clinic has many resources for Soldiers and families dealing with mTBI and other post-deployment issues. Clinic staff can then work on a way to get the Soldier involved in his or her own diagnosis and treatment.

Other routes include talking to your Family Readiness Group, or FRG, chain of command, or local chaplain.

“The chaplain is oh so important, because he can walk right over and talk to the Soldier,” Schneider added. “The important thing is to get people talking about and aware of the situation.”

Family involvement and understanding is paramount to insuring a successful recovery for the injured Soldier.

“The family member is different, but they do recover,” said Lopez.

“You have to understand that they are going to forget things, and they’re going to be irritable,” she said, “but once the headaches stop and the sleeplessness ends, there will be improvement.”

Enlisted Soldier chooses Army over law degree, civilian career

the sergeant said. “I probably get asked once a week why I’m enlisted if I have a law degree.”

“I’ve known (Williams) for about a month and a half, and I was kind of shocked when I found out about his college background,” said Sgt. Aaron Mertens, lead UAV maintainer for Company B, 4th Brigade Combat Team, 1st Infantry Division.

“I was shocked, because I don’t think I would have chosen to enlist in the military with that kind of a degree,” said Mertens.

In fact, Williams says the Army has provided him with such wonderful experiences and opportunities to meet amazing people, that he has changed his goals in life.

“Growing up, I thought (being a lawyer) would be the greatest thing, and I didn’t think that much about the Army,” he said. “Now I think the opposite. I think that (practicing) law isn’t that great, and the Army turned out to be a lot more than ever I expected it to be.”

When he returns to home base in Germany, Williams says he plans to apply for a position in Army Special Forces or as a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter pilot.

Williams’ company commander is confident that the sergeant can achieve any goal he chooses.

“(Williams) is a hard worker who learns quickly, and he’s a model Soldier because of his excellent physical fitness,” said Capt. Shirwen Separa.

“I could definitely see him becoming a company commander or a first sergeant one day; it just depends on what route he chooses to take,” he said.

Now completing his second combat tour, Williams says he hopes to be meeting the challenges the Army offers for a long time to come.

“Most of my classmates have jobs that pay well and they get to go home at the end of the day,” he said. “If I could live more than one life, then that choice would be great. But I’ve got to be Special Forces, a pilot or something cool, because I just like that adrenaline rush. I want to be at the tip of the spear and have a long and distinguished Army career.”

“It’s great that he’s going after what he loves to do, instead of what everybody expects him to do,” said Mertens.

appreciate the improvements that were made. This uniform was designed by Soldiers for Soldiers.”

All brown T-shirts, black combat boots and green and black jungle boots, woodland and desert-camouflage caps, olive-drab-green name and U.S. Army tapes, subdued-olive-green shoulder-sleeve insignias and the black rigger belt and web belt with open-faced black buckle will also become obsolete on April 30.

Active-duty and reserve-component Soldiers can continue to wear the black-knit cap and the black micro-fleece-knit cap with the cold-weather woodland-camouflage field jacket until Sept. 30.

The Army Reserve Officer Training Corps wear-out date for these items is April 9.

According to Easley, there haven’t been any official surveys to determine how many Soldiers still have the BDUs or Desert BDUs, but she said it’s probably hard to find many who aren’t wearing the ACU.

But if Soldiers are hanging on to any of these uniforms, they can save them for posterity. They aren’t required to turn them in. The only requirement is that they know the wear-out date and report for duty in ACUs May 1.

“Thousands of our great Soldiers spent many years defending our country wearing that honorable uniform. I know it means something to them, just as wearing the ACU will mean something to today’s Army,” said Easley.

Hohenfels wrestler competes in U.S. Forces European championships

An Operations Group career counselor competed in the 2008 U.S. Forces-Europe Wrestling Championships held at Stuttgart's Patch Fitness Center Jan. 5-6.

Wrestling in the 185-pound class, 39-year-old Sgt. 1st Class Craig Gransbery said he went to the event because attendance has been low in recent years.

Deployments and the ongoing drawdown accounted for the small field of competitors, tournament officials said. With only six athletes, the planned double elimination tournament was changed to the best two out of three matches.

In the first match of the 185-pound class, between 21-year-old Jacob Asher, Ramstein Air Base, and Gransbery, Gransbery scored the first takedown but gave up four points in the first clinch.

Asher scored five points with a grand amplitude throw, a move that sent Gransbery, with feet flying, onto his back, and ended the period. In the second period, Asher scored a takedown and a tilt before Gransbery threw him for three points.

Asher countered with a roll through and led 5-3 at the end of the first minute. He scored three points in the first clinch. In the second clinch, he dominated Gransbery in his own clinch, scoring five points. Asher won the period, 13-4, and the match.

In their second meeting, Asher led the first 60 seconds of the first period 3-1. Asher clinched first and scored a three-point throw. Gransbery scored three points in the second clinch. Asher brought the score to 8-4 with two more points. The second period was all Asher. He scored six points in the first minute for a superior decision, thus winning the match.

"This was a very good match, said referee Jeff Pellaton. "Both of these guys are very, very skilled and evenly matched. Craig displays incredible skill at his age."

"Age is a factor, and of course, so is conditioning," said Gransbery. "I don't have the conditioning; wisdom makes up for some of it. But I haven't wrestled competitively in 10 years."

In the first 185-pound freestyle match, Gransbery scored the first point, but was pushed off the edge of the mat with 50 seconds to go. While the wrestlers were tied 1-1 at the end of the period, Asher claimed victory as he was the last to score.

In the second period, Gransbery dominated with three takedowns and won the period 3-0. In a sudden death period, the wrestlers were tied Thirty-three seconds into the match, Jacob Asher pins and holds Craig Gransbery for the gold medal in the freestyle 185-pound category of the 2008 U.S. Forces-Europe Wrestling Championships Jan. 6 at the Patch Fitness Center in Stuttgart.

1-1 when Asher scored a tilt (turning the opponent so that the opponent's shoulders face the mat at an angle of less than 90 degrees) and held Gransbery for a fall and the match.

The second match was over almost before it started. Gransbery scored the first two points, but Asher countered with a tilt and held for a fall with only 33 seconds on the clock for the win.

Gransbery, who is also a wrestling coach at Hohenfels High School, said the main reason he traveled to Stuttgart was to participate in the officials' clinic that was held in conjunction with the championships.

Pass your keys to a designated driver this Super Bowl Sunday

USAG Grafenwoehr Safety Office

U.S. Army Garrison Grafenwoehr Safety Office announced Friday that they are joining forces with the National Football League, the Techniques for Effective Alcohol Management Coalition, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and other state and local highway safety and law enforcement officials to remind everyone to act responsibly by designating a sober driver if they plan on using alcohol this Super Bowl weekend.

"We want to remind everyone this weekend that real Fans Don't Let Fans Drive Drunk," said Garrison Safety Director Michael Schwarz. "If you plan on drinking alcohol while cheering your team on to victory, pass your keys to a sober, designated driver before the Super Bowl party begins."

"Follow the rules or law enforcement will penalize you for driving impaired," said Schwarz. "We want everyone to make the right play for the big game."

The details

Super Bowl Sunday is one of America's biggest and most entertaining national sporting events.

It is also one of the nation's most dangerous days on the roadways due to impaired driving; 39 percent of all traffic fatalities in the U.S. took place during Super Bowl 2006 weekend. (NHTSA)

This effort is part of the NFL-TEAM's season-long Responsibility Has Its Rewards national designated driver program.

During the 2007/08 NFL season, more than 100,000 football fans pledged to be a sober designated driver. For 2008, TEAM projects that number will continue to increase as more fans plan ahead and make the responsible, winning play.

Super Bowl Sunday is one of America's biggest and most entertaining national sporting events as friends and families gather to socialize and watch the big game.

Yet, it is also one of the nation's most dangerous days on the roadways due to impaired driving.

According to NHTSA, 130 people, representing 39 percent of all traffic fatalities in the U.S., died during the 2006 Super Bowl weekend in crashes involving impaired drivers with blood alcohol concentration levels of .08 or higher.

Schwarz said that designating a sober driver should be on the top of everyone's Super Bowl party list.

If you are hosting a Super Bowl party:

- Remember, you can be held liable and prosecuted if someone you served ends up in an impaired driving crash.
- Make sure all of your guests designate their sober drivers in advance, or help arrange ride-sharing with other sober drivers.
- Serve lots of food and include lots of non-alcoholic beverages at the party.
- Stop serving alcohol at the end of the third quarter of the game and begin serving coffee and dessert.
- Keep the numbers for local cab companies handy, and take the keys away from anyone who is thinking of driving while impaired.

If you are attending a Super Bowl party or watching at a sports bar or restaurant:

- Avoid drinking too much alcohol too fast. Pace yourself. Eat enough food, take breaks and alternate with non-alcoholic drinks.
 - Designate your sober driver before the party begins and give that person your car keys.
 - If you don't have a designated driver, ask a sober friend for a ride home; call a cab, friend or family member to come and get you; or just stay where you are and sleep it off until you are sober.
 - Never let a friend leave your sight if you think they are about to drive while impaired. Remember, Fans Don't Let Fans Drive Drunk.
 - Always buckle up – it's still your best defense against other impaired drivers.

After two days of advancing through pool play at Mueller Fitness Center on Sheridan Kaserne, Bob McEntire won the 2007 Garmisch Holiday Racquetball Tournament Dec. 9 in straight sets of 15-14 and 15-10.

The tournament began with two pools of athletes from USAG-Garmisch, the Edelweiss Lodge and Resort, and the George C. Marshall Center, with the top four players from each pool moving on to the Sunday single elimination rounds.

Those eight players battled it out until two friendly rivals who'd met in competition before, McEntire and Jose Valdez, were left facing each other in the final match.

"This was a first-class operation put on by the staff which ensured that, at the end, every participant was a winner," said McEntire, a conference support specialist for the Marshall Center.

"The tournament resulting in new friends being made and significantly increased awareness of the sport," said McEntire

Although he thought he might have found a weakness in McEntire's backhand he could use to win, Valdez lost the final close games.

"It was real intense—it was a battle!" said Valdez. "I tried to exploit his backhand and keep the ball on the walls. It was a good match and I hope we can play some more competitive games later."

The fitness center staff provided sandwiches, fruit and drinks for the athletes, and the prizes were donated by Racquetworld.com, said garrison sports and fitness director Mike Criswell.

"Lots of fun and exercise for all of the participants," said Criswell. "We plan to continue to bring more of these competitions for the athletes of Garmisch."

"I really enjoyed playing and especially winning" he said. "I look forward to continued use of this first class facility. See you on the court."
